Over the last decade, the Missouri Arts Council (MAC), our state arts agency, has worked more actively to encourage deeper inclusion, diversity, equity, and access in its programs. MAC, for instance, has sought new collaborations in arts-adjacent and seemingly non-adjacent fields, including topical convenings. On April 26, 2018, MAC and Mid-America Arts Alliance co-coordinated Art Ease: A Regional Convening on Arts and the Military in Kansas City, Mo., with support from the National Endowment for the Arts. The conference was such a success that MAC’s Special Initiatives Coordinator Virginia Sanders and Executive Director Michael Donovan invited partners to organize Arts and Aging in Missouri. The Missouri Folk Arts Program joined the planning committee, as did the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute. The state's Minority Health and Human Services and the Missouri Coalition Celebrating Care Continuum Change also supported the all-day meeting on April 4, 2019 at Memorial Union on the Mizzou Campus. Arts and Aging in Missouri featured inspiring performances from a range of Missouri artists: storyteller Deb Swanegan, jazz guitarist Joel Anderson, Missouri Poet Laureate Aliki Barnstone, and award-winning visual artist Solomon Thurman. Missouri arts leaders Lois Brace of the Presser Arts Center and Debra Campbell of Arts and AGEing KC compelled the audience with details and demonstrations of ways they implement creative aging programs in Mexico, Mo., and greater Kansas City, Mo., respectively. Lt. Governor Mike Kehoe stopped by with words of support and encouragement. MAC enriched the agenda with national creative aging leaders: Gary Glazner, Alzheimer’s Poetry Project founder; UMSL Professor Suzanne Doyle, who lectures across the U.S. about Ageless Arts: Creativity in Later Life; and Professor Jon Kay of Traditional Arts Indiana, who researches, writes, and develops programs about handcrafted “memory objects.”

The audience itself was full of experts, too, with 116 participants from Columbia, Jefferson City, St. Louis, Kansas City, Springfield, and beyond. Artists, arts administrators, curators, docents, and arts educators sat side-by-side with social workers, caregivers, nursing home staff, physicians, nurses, and entrepreneurs. Museum of Art and Archaeology and Museum of Anthropology staff attended, as did docents and Museum Associates members. A din of conversations rose from over a dozen lunch tables at midday, as the conference encouraged deeper conversations among all participants. MAC was pleased with feedback via a post-conference survey, where a majority of participants expressed their interest in future Arts and Aging events and projects.

Arts and Aging in Missouri

Master storyteller Deb Swanegan (Columbia) wowed the audience with poignant tales of her grandmother, as stitched into a quilt passed down from generation to generation.

Debra Campbell, CEO of Arts and AGEing KC, demonstrates the power of physical, artistic activities on brain health and quality of life.

Joel Anderson (Columbia) entertained the crowd with some jazz standards. Outside his office, the attorney practices creative aging, doing gigs weekly at arts and culture events as a soloist and with small ensembles.

Missouri Folk Arts Program

Lisa L. Higgins
Director

Arts and Aging in Missouri

The Missouri Folk Arts Program joined the planning committee, as did the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute. The state’s Minority Health and Human Services and the Missouri Coalition Celebrating Care Continuum Change also supported the all-day meeting on April 4, 2019 at Memorial Union on the Mizzou Campus. Arts and Aging in Missouri featured inspiring performances from a range of Missouri artists: storyteller Deb Swanegan, jazz guitarist Joel Anderson, Missouri Poet Laureate Aliki Barnstone, and award-winning visual artist Solomon Thurman. Missouri arts leaders Lois Brace of the Presser Arts Center and Debra Campbell of Arts and AGEing KC competed the audience with details and demonstrations of ways they implement creative aging programs in Mexico, Mo., and greater Kansas City, Mo., respectively. Lt. Governor Mike Kehoe stopped by with words of support and encouragement. MAC enriched the agenda with national creative aging leaders: Gary Glazner, Alzheimer’s Poetry Project founder; UMSL Professor Suzanne Doyle, who lectures across the U.S. about Ageless Arts: Creativity in Later Life; and Professor Jon Kay of Traditional Arts Indiana, who researches, writes, and develops programs about handcrafted “memory objects.”

The audience itself was full of experts, too, with 116 participants from Columbia, Jefferson City, St. Louis, Kansas City, Springfield, and beyond. Artists, arts administrators, curators, docents, and arts educators sat side-by-side with social workers, caregivers, nursing home staff, physicians, nurses, and entrepreneurs. Museum of Art and Archaeology and Museum of Anthropology staff attended, as did docents and Museum Associates members. A din of conversations rose from over a dozen lunch tables at midday, as the conference encouraged deeper conversations among all participants. MAC was pleased with feedback via a post-conference survey, where a majority of participants expressed their interest in future Arts and Aging events and projects.

MAC’s Specialist Initiatives Coordinator Virginia Sanders (left) engages with audience members during a break from the conference agenda.